THE COUNTRY STORE.

IFrom Cincinnati Commercial Tribune 1 The great departmental stores of our cities have awakened our country merchants. The city dailies bring the departmental stores to the homes of people in all our rural towns and villages. These places are, besides, flooded with catalogues, descriptive of the wares of these great establishments and clearly indicative of the prices they call for. The resident of the country town can order from either newspaper advertisement or catalogue and his order by mall will at once be honored. Orders by mail are, day by day, in increasing in numbers, reaching the departmental stores. The country store is, therefore, brought into almost as close a competition with these large establishments as even the smaller city stores. Will the country store disappear? No, but the country storekeeper must adopt new methods. He must keep up with the times. He must renovate and replenish his stock more frequently. He must keep on hand a class of goods in all respects acceptable to customers. He must treat his neighbors with unvarying kindness and consideration. They are no longer bound to buy from him The word "must" disappears in this regard from their vocabulary. The departmental store will, we believe kill entirely the credit system, so injurious allke to the country merchant and the farmer. The country merchant must, to keep up with the times, sell for cash. The lower prices his goods call for will enable his customers to pay more readily in cash for their purchases, and thus prevent overcharging on the one hand and extravagance and improvidence on the other. The country store will remain, but it will no longer be the country store of old, with stocks six or more months old and prices many points in advance of actual figures. It will be a store of quick miles and light profits. The attentive, wrbane, kindly country merchant will | be, at all times, a successful competitor of the departmental store. He is right there among his people. They know him, they like him, and hence will patronise him. He will, besides, be a much more frequent visitor and larger purchaser in our city markets.

Chicago, June 18-The Building Trades No Call to Decide Vice Presidency Till Delegates Arrive.

Chicago, June 18—The Building Trades Council held a prolonged session last night in which the failure of negotiations for a settlement of the labor troubles was earnestly discussed, but adjourned at an early hour this morning without having promulgated any definite line of action.

According to the statement of President Carroll, the members of the Building Trades Council unanimously approved the plan of arbitration suggested by the labor delegates to the Building
